Oregonians, regardless of political party, should have the ability to vote by mail in a secure system that's been in place for the last 20+ years. The mere notion of widespread election fraud I don't find to be true (because Oregon does vote in a mix of democrats and republicans, it's neither a clean sweep for either party, and if there were widespread election fraud, the evidence would at least point it in one direction). Fears of election fraud do not get quelled by using methods that have been proven less effective at getting people to vote than what's being proposed here. You want to increase turn out and accessibility for more constituents? Mandate everyone have to vote and open voting for more days. You want the will of the people be better represented in Oregon? Split the electoral college vote or simply just cast the electoral college votes with the popular choice.
