

Submitter:

Lloyd Mills

On Behalf Of:

Committee:

Senate Committee On Rules

Measure, Appointment or Topic:

SB210

This is very simple. If the opposition is going to claim that election integrity is paramount, as they inevitably will, they should have no reservations in regard to exhausting any and all tactics to ensure and uphold said integrity. The idea is also quite simple. The only people whom should be voting in our elections are legal citizens and citizens with legal right to do so. Making elections a single day, in-person event is by far the simplest method to ensure the afore mentioned ought claims. It doesn't cost anything, the state is at perfectly liberty to make voting day a state holiday so as not to have citizens otherwise disposed by the day to day grind they so ardently press upon us. Further, if we as citizens are to have faith in our electoral institutions, we must have some mechanism by which storing faith is logical, reasonable and rational. A single day, in-person even is much the simplest way to achieve that end.