We have five voters in our home, in person voting would be a hardship for four of us. Mostly from physical barriers from illness or geriatric concerns to work causing local proximity being hapazardous on voting day. But really, the biggest concern is enough spaces that are open and can be staffed sufficiently to meet the public need for access to voting in a timely manner without putting an undo burden on voters or the volunteers who make voting possible - nevermind having to train new volunteers and finding enough bodies.
