When I first voted it was in person at the local elementary school. Showing ID and signing my name on the leger line made it seem like there was real value in my personal vote. The process removed most any doubt as to who had voted and there was no discussion if my vote had been received in time. The polls closed at 8pm so I had to arrive before that time. The process instilled in me that it was a responsibility worth taking seriously. I believe in person voting on the specific day would inspire young voters to care about the process.
