Ballots in Oregon are long. I normally spend a couple of evenings reading the various positions and the candidate biographies, and deciding how to vote. It all takes two or three hours. I can't imagine having to do this in a voting booth on polling day. Worse, as a 69-year old, if I have to stand out in the rain for a half hour queuing-up to get into a polling station, I might decide that voting at all is too much trouble. Oh, wait: that's the whole purpose of this bill: to discourage people from voting, as well as to stop them from adequately considering the issues and people on the ballot.

Why would the senate even consider such a measure?
