Mail-in voting has been a crucial aspect of the electoral process, offering an alternative for those who cannot physically visit polling stations. The proposal to repeal mail-in voting raises significant concerns about accessibility, convenience, and the protection of democratic values. Preserving mail-in voting is essential to ensuring that every eligible citizen can exercise their right to vote in a manner that is safe, convenient, and secure. Therefore, I staunchly oppose any efforts to repeal mail-in voting, advocating instead for its continued support and enhancement.
