It makes absolutely no sense to me to "take a giant step BACKWARD" if we want the largest percentage possible of eligible voters to in fact vote! From what I've read over time, "mail-in" ballots are quite secure. And, particularly for people with various disabilities, why would we make it "a challenge" for them to vote, not to mention young working families with children who simply rely on voting by mail, as they do not have "extra" time to stand in long lines to vote! Taking away voting by mail would be analogous to going back to "stagecoaches" delivering the mail vs. the USPS. We don't deliver our letters "in person," why would we require voting "in person?" What a ridiculous measure!
