Here we go again, people who are inexperienced with firearms see a video and fear such devices. First, I can tell you that in reality, you should be supporting such devices, why? These are gimmicks, trying to simulate automatic weapons fire rate. The problem is, the rest of the components ARE NOT designed for this, thus you have weapons failure constantly! The ejection port configurations are wrong, the bolt design is too heavy to cycle properly, the magazines aren't designed for a high feed rate, etc. You stack those together and you have a very failure prone firearm, which is what you want the bad guy to have. When was the last time a gun crime was committed with one of these gimmicks? Never. Just say no to useless regulations. All this will do is get innocent people with no bad intentions becoming a felon just for possession. Let's save those legal resources for real crimes. Vote NO
