This is an egregious overreach of power. You have no right to either limit or observe an owner's use of water on their own land. Restrictions on use have shown little to no effect in mitigating droughts. Rather droughts have become opportunities for the state to exercise favoritism in granting water to companies and special interest groups while putting a boot to the neck of small farms and food producers. You will no doubt be giving your friends plaques that declare their backyard as a special habitat so they can water year around while limiting small farms. There will be a mass exodus of small farmers if this happens.
