The licensure of teachers has stretched way back. Long ago, as a college student interning in the public school system, there were requirements of teachers then. When presenting required information - the students got UP and LEFT because they felt the information was overreach. They preferred suspension despite my protestations that these were required subjects. That was 1977. It was prohibitive and narrow-minded then.

Now in Oregon - it appears that in any venue from the school room to social media, teachers can be suspended for the same thing. Narrow-minded, obtuse, and unlike 19778, leaves actual teaching behind. Forcing teachers *and students* to learn subjects and teachers to be subjugated to suspension is off-the-track inability to think critically. Quite frankly, like in medicine these days, all you need is Max the Talking Head to teach from algorithms.
