I live on the Tualatin River and I am happy to see beavers passing up and down the river. A large willow on my river bank suddenly lost a huge limb when it cracked and fell into the river. The beavers quickly arrived and chewed off the leaves and small branches, then the inner bark - the cambium layer.

In other words, the beavers cleaned up the mess and hauled away smaller branches. I didn't have to worry about rotting leaves attracting bugs, etc.
