I believe that instead of getting rid of the low-income housing programs we should be seeing more support for those less fortunate. Let's not forget we're all human and we need help. There are groups of people out there that want to take a part of helping others, many of us have dedicated our life's to the housing industry in one way or other. This is because we want to make a difference, and seeing the smile on those beautiful children, the gratitude and hope in the parents faces that see their new and habitable place they will live in, is the reason we continue to work in the housing industry. Let us continue to be humane, because once we lose that, what is our purpose here.
