We all deserve the right to some privacy. There's, I believe, justification for surveillance in cases where there's an obvious threat to persons or the community. For example, cameras at intersections that have an unusual amount of traffic violations. Using a drone for pursuing an active criminal when persons or the community are at risk.

Our lives are being monitored in so many ways. Anytime our location is tracked online, whether or not we authorize it, we have lost some autonomy.

Rather than expanding the increasing number of ways we are continually monitored, laws need to restrict them. Other than an immediate need to protect, a warrant should be needed in order to track anyone in any other circumstance.
