Clearly you folks have a problem with reading, which is odd, since you didn't drop the standards for reading in public schools until after you graduated and wormed your way into the legislature. The second amendment says "shall not be infringed". The Federal Constitution guarantees a republican form of government in the states. The 14th amendment further clarifies that the rights enumerated by the Federal Constitution apply equally to all citizens of the US.

Now, I know, beyond reading difficulties, you probably suffer from political ignorance of what a republican form of government is. It is a form of constitutional democracy whereby the rights of the individual are inalienable, meaning they can't be taken or given away. They cannot be voted away by fellow citizens or their so-called "representatives". Gun regulations are unconstitutional, your actions in repeatedly attacking them demonstrate your illegitimate as a governing body. You are violating the contract by which we the people consent to be governed. Simply put, you are failures.
