

Submitter:	Richard Burton
On Behalf Of:	People in pain
Committee:	Senate Committee On Rules
Measure, Appointment or Topic:	SB1003

Making suicide too easy and casual leads to a pattern of devaluing life and even promoting death as preferable to being
A burden on others. It also changes the social contract towards expecting people to do the 'sensible' thing and relieve the rest of us the time, money, and bother to care for and befriend those on the edge.

Society is drifting quickly towards social darwinism which is too competitive and Less compassionate. We want to live in a warmer society not a colder one.

Already, we have a large class of people who are described as the 'precariat'. Bills such this one expand the plight of folks who are left behind in the dust. Because when suicide becomes normalized it becomes expected and Those who might be saved or comforted are isolated pushed in the hole and quickly forgotten.

We already have a broken mental health care system. And a broken economy that is leaving whole generations behind.

We should be structuring the system to actively nurture everyone into a happy stable social environment.