I am a retired senior who lives on social security alone. I have to pay for my own supplemental medical insurance. I get by but do not have much discretionary funds. A hike in taxes, as you have outlined, would potentially exceed my income. Now I am retired from the logging industry. At one time the revenue from the timber sales, paid a lot for roads schools and many community necessities. In addition they kept the mountains groomed and there were less fires. Since President Trump is mandating more logging, could we not look into this as a new source of state revenue.
