This is a classic "gut and stuff" maneuver—and the voters of my city see right through it.

They've been clear: before any new taxes are imposed, there must be accountability. Transparency. Responsibility. Instead, what we're seeing is a rushed, backdoor process with major changes added at the last minute—without time for proper review or public input.

This tactic by the Democratic leadership is in poor form. And let me be very clear: it will be remembered come election season.

Voters are tired of being sidelined. They're tired of being taxed without being heard. And they're tired of political games being played with their livelihoods.

Accountability is coming.
