It only makes sence. The public should have access to public lands, and landowners should have liability protections for the access. Sometimes public property is "land locked" by private property. I have came to cattle guards before that were heavily posted "Private property. No trespassing" blocking access to public lands, only to find out later that it's the property off the road that is private, not the road.
Corner to corner crossing access will help keep public lands accessable.
