In my mind it's fairly simple. Skiing, Snowboarding, and Mountain Biking can contain aspects that are inherently dangerous. During the pursuit of this recreation, a person should be accountable for any injuries they received. If there is failure of operational equipment resulting in death or injury then a legal coarse of action should be available. These incidents are infrequent and possibly freakish in nature. If a case against an operator is brought, and they are found guilty the punishment needs to match the violation. These giant settlements are just wrong and as we have seen devastating to the recreation industry.
