

Submitter: Russell Kautz
On Behalf Of:
Committee: House Committee On Early Childhood and Human Services
Measure, Appointment or HB4059
Topic:

Vote No! Narrowing “Abuse” to Financial Capacity is a trap. HB 4059 modifies “negligent treatment” to account for a parent’s financial ability. The bill conditions this on the parents’ duty to accept “appropriate services”. This creates a subjective “compliance trap” where the state’s failure to provide accessible services, such as specialized respite for a child with a disability, could be used to justify intervention while simultaneously raising the bar so high that the state ignores the child until a crisis occurs.

Prevention works only when adults are allowed to act early — not after damage has already been done. By changing the definition of “threatened harm,” HB 4059 risks allowing serious psychological and emotional abuse to go unrecognized and unaddressed until it escalates. Children with disabilities are especially vulnerable, as they may have difficulty reporting mistreatment or being believed when they do.