The referendum signed by many thousands of Oregonians was intended to put the tax measure on the November ballot. Based on the unprecedented opposition to the ridiculous proposed tax increase, it is clear that the measure will fail, whether it is on the November ballot, or in May. The proposal to move it to the May election was based purely on politics, so it would not be on the minds of voters in the important November election. This political stunt should not be allowed. The referendum called for the bill to be voted on in November, and that is what should happen.
