Dear Members of the Senate Committee on Education,

This bill needs more work before it is passed.

It does not provide the authority that teachers need because it is a legal solution to a relational problem, which would produce additional legal challenges. For example, under this rule, when a teacher decides to keep a student in class, if other students or their parents disagree with the teacher's decision, it will be challenged by a lawsuit, backed by a law like this.

The relational problem this bill attempts to solve can be addressed in a different way, which the majority of people agree on: tiered intervention supports, adequately trained and experienced behavioral support staff, and well-funded schools to appropriately staff these needs.

Let's keep working on the language, together with the funding, to produce a bill that will truly support a teacher's authority with the collective accountability of a fully supported school that can meet the challenges of what our youth need today.

Thank you for your time and public service.

Sincerely,

Andrea Pacheco
